Agenda: POLST update with J. Citko & M.Apfe

///////Bzzzzzz: conversations on the web

What is appropriate in this situation?

A survey was taken in late January regarding the appropriated disposition for an unresponsive 56yr old homeless patient who had a poor prognosis. There were three care options: #1 continue the aggressive, albeit, ineffective, care, #2 write DNR order and transfer the patient to a skilled-nursing facility, #3 withdraw life support on the basis of substituted judgment. Cultural and geographic differences were noted. Many chose #3.

Slow Reasoning Movement

USC researchers have determined that the part of our brains most utilized for quick decision making and cultivated by video and computer gaming may not be those most helpful in areas that require measured philosophical analysis (i.e. ethical concerns?) See A. Damasio's study findings www.usc.edu/schools/college/bci/index.html

Poetry from the trenches

words—once intended to encompass caring and attention-- transformed with the modern culture and technology, to suggest sometimes the impossible, even, the unworthy or unintended.

Cure by Veneta Masson

In Latin it means care, conjures priests and temples the laying on of hands sacred pilgrimage
sacrifice
the sickbed invalid and solemn attendants.
How far we have come.
Today's English
has neatly expunged
these purely human elements.
Cure is impersonal, consequential, unequivocal, sometimes violent-- the annihilation
of the thing that ails.

Highlights from 1/ 21/09 meeting**

N. Kockler reviewed the history, mission of St. Vincent's hospital. Dr.T. Horowitz, FP and chair of Bioethics Committee emphasized that their task is about the patient and not business. Consults are not accepted from case management or UR. He advocates a position free of financial interest. He also chairs County Medical Society's PAC and is a physician rep to LACARE. He advocates community standards guiding bioethics decision. Role of Bioethics consultations was discussed with Stuart Finder citing historical concerns regarding physician fees. Roberto Dell'Oro raised the issue of just distribution of resources. Malcolm Shaner believes distributive justice, at least within one's institution, is an important goal. Hornstein noted the problem of families who demand medically inappropriate treatments. Most agreed that economic issues cannot be ignored by framing the issues as simply an ethics matter. Ron Miller emphasized the importance of national guidelines, especially when procedures requested will definitely, or probably not, work. Roberto again stressed that clinical and organizational ethics are distinct despite their connection. The issues of nursing homes were discussed with members weighing in on their experiences. An invitation to experts on the subject of how ethics issues are addressed in nursing homes will be made for future meetings. Kaiser's policy on Public Guardian Patients DNR orders was shared. There ensued a spirited discussion of the importance of a direct role of the physician in specific POLST procedures which continued subsequently via email.

This nurse approaching the patient has discarded temple garb for practical scrubs.
His gloved hands
unsheathe the magic bullet, shoot it through the central line where it locks onto the target cells.
For the not-yet-cured,
there is still sacred pilgrimage—that dogged slog
to the high tech shrine,
the health food store,
the finish line of the annual race where, etched on each undaunted face, is a gritty tale of survival.

A Wider View: Better to give than to receive?

While some medical aid organizations believe that charging the recipients a fee may empower them, studies suggest that among the very poor, such a fee inhibits access to care, according to WHO's Commission on Macroeconomics and Health ...to say nothing of the dubious ethics of charging the impoverished for care that is donated.

News Break: ICRC report reveals medical professionals involvement in torture

International Committee of the Red Cross report, previously held secret, revealed the medical personnel working for the CIA monitored prisoners undergoing such stresses as water boarding, small container confinement, arm shackling to ceiling, exposure to cold and wall slamming.

While the Red Cross policy is to keep its reports to governments confidential to encourage access to prisoners, Dr Steven Miles, Center for Bioethics at the U of Minn. believes the medical role of the CIA program should be fully disclosed to deter future misconduct. M. Gregg Bloche, Georgetown U law professor who trained as a psychiatrist, noted the report's revelations to be a "disturbing confirmation of our worst fears about medical professionals' involvement in directing and modulation (of) cruel treatment and torture." <http://tinyurl.com/d2d3y9>

AMERICA'S "WOE" GRADE IN MENTAL HEALTH

National Alliance for the Mentally Ill (NAMI) issued a report card designed to assess how services for the mentally ill, including outpatient facilities, are functioning. They found only a handful of states effectively implement laws that could protect patients and society from noncompliance with effective treatment; Iowa, N.Y., N.C. and Wisconsin being the most notable.

Despite the fact that high profile states such as CA, NY, PA, and WA, as well as 38 others have passed laws authorizing involuntary assisted outpatient treatment, very few of those states managed to use the laws on a regular basis. The effectiveness of the implication of "Kendra's Law" in NY where "an involuntary assisted outpatient treatment resulting in fewer hospitalizations and arrest." is contrasted with California's Laura's Law, a court ordered outpatient treatment that is rarely used and thus has had little impact on "revolving door issues with homelessness, hospitalization and the criminal justice system." Given the economic calamities the country is facing at this time, it was no surprise that CA received a D in the NAMI 'Grading the States' 2009 report card.
